Rethinking education for a knowledge-based society by Shabnam Baloch Sunday, October 07, 2012

The real challenge now is to reform, create and develop educational systems and policies aiming at preparing an individual to work in a borderless economy.

Educational values, beliefs, approaches, philosophies and practices are undergoing constant changes under the effects of globalisation. The very objective of education has been development of the whole individual. The bare minimum level to attain this objective in the past agrarian-based society was to obtain basic or primary education and it was up to secondary education in the not very old industrial society. In the present borderless information-based society, education needs to make an individual able to accumulate the capacity to respond to the additional demands of this society of a globalised world today. It is not enough to enhance merely the capability of reading, writing and doing arithmetic; in the rapidly globalised world, there is a drastic need to revisit and re-conceptualise educational outcomes.

Education in today's world needs to raise a deeper understanding and sensitivity towards the environment, peace, cultural and social diversities, increased competitiveness, the need of reconsidering and revising gender roles and many of the other things crucial to be responded to today in a very sagacious way. Education prepares the individual to connect and live in harmony with the environment around him since globalisation has changed the size, nature, quality and dynamics of that environment.

In today's knowledge-based society, education essentially plays a key role in defining the future direction and status of any nation. Developed countries are mainly distinguished by their education systems, practices, and best educational institutions, especially higher education. The role of universities is of so much significance in the development of societies that the experts comment, "It enables a society to maintain an independent understanding of itself and its worlds." 'Of itself and its worlds' is inclusive of the full range of the natural, human and social worlds as objects of understanding. Institutions of higher education should also aim at inspiring and enabling individuals to develop their capabilities at the highest levels. Not only that but also the ability to use that knowledge, understanding and a higher set of skills in the Best interests of the country's economy must be enhanced.

In knowledge-based societies, the focus of education is always on individual needs and on the needs of society as a whole, and on the future needs and dynamics of society. However, the aim of education should also be focusing on best utilising the indigenous knowledge, practices and wisdom deeply rooted in society. That knowledge can be updated in the response to the modern society of today's world but its actual wisdom and originality should also be reflected in some other ways to make it unique and original in the otherwise globalised version of education. This is not easy as it requires a deeper understanding of societal values, culture and educational philosophies.

It is in fact a major challenge to realise the full potential of society by providing the best education system integrated with indigenous wisdom, knowledge and practices with the globalised version of the same. It does not only require tremendous intellectual work but also a deeper commitment as well in order to materialise this vision of education in the changing world of today.

Another important factor to consider is to mobilise and convince the masses to understand and realise the fact that we need to transform our traditional and conventional society into a knowledge-based society in order to sustain well in future. It is a very important though difficult job, for many still view this as a westernisation of society. Expanding the capacities of governments, experts, civil society and communities through policy advice, developing training material and conducting training workshops, international conferences and information sharing is of utmost importance to meet the current requirements of education. It is also crucial to develop new standards of learning outcomes and their relevance to today's knowledge-based society. Space for the testing of new ideas and innovations should always be welcomed, with enough space for this in order to avoid stagnation of the system. It must have the potential to be dynamic and have the capacity to adopt emerging traits by coping with the rapid changes in the global scenario effectively. The real challenge now, therefore, is to reform, create and develop educational systems and policies aiming at preparing an individual to work in a borderless economy and live in a global society, and also preserving and best utilising the indigenous knowledge and societal wisdom. In other words, we need to revitalise our education system to create citizens who can better relate themselves to a global scenario. Considering the increased economic globalisation and restructuring in the political systems of the world and the growing requirements of knowledge and information, it is inevitable that the education system needs to be changed at all levels, i.e.

In terms of structure, function, curriculum and approach.

Educational planners and policy makers must think seriously about the cost and consequences of not updating the education system as per today's job market requirements and creating a workforce whose majority may be unable to compete according to the global competitiveness indicators.

The state should realise and commit that it must give all its citizens the tools to succeed and provide leadership in the new global environment. Updating the education system and policies as per the requirement of future society in a globalised world is the only way to sustain in this Highly competitive knowledge-based society.

Although this is not an easy task in a country where access to even basic education is a big challenge and where millions are deprived of basic necessities of life, but as the old English Saying goes where there is a will, there is away.

Eurodämmerung

The Crisis of Europe Timothy Garton Ash

After World War II, Europe began a process of peaceful political unification unprecedented there and unmatched anywhere else. But the project began to go wrong in the early 1990s, when western European leaders started moving too quickly toward a flawed monetary union. Now, as Europe faces a still-unresolved debt crisis, its drive toward unification has stalled—and unless fear or foresight gets it going again, the union could slide toward irrelevance.

Why the Euro Will Survive C. Fred Bergsten

The euro's naysayers have it all wrong. True, the continent's powerhouses have yet to agree on a clear plan to save the common currency, as each one is seeking to secure the best deal for itself. But they all also know that the collapse of the eurozone would be a political and economic disaster, so they will ultimately pay whatever price is necessary to keep it together.

Germany's Unsustainable Growth Adam Tooze

Germany seems like Europe's lone island of fiscal stability, but trouble lurks under its impressive export-fueled growth. An obsession with debt and austerity has blocked domestic investment as the country has ignored problems such as a shrinking work force and outdated infrastructure. Germany needs to borrow and spend more or face the end of its economic miracle.

Essays

How China Sees America Andrew J. Nathan and Andrew Scobell 32

The United States worries about China's rise, but Washington rarely considers how the world looks through Beijing's eyes. Even when U.S. officials speak sweetly and softly, their Chinese counterparts hear sugarcoated threats and focus on the big stick in the background. America should not shrink from setting out its expectations of Asia's rising superpower—but it should do so calmly, coolly, and professionally.

04 SEP 2012 WINTLIBRAY Contents Bucking Beijing Aaron L. Friedberg For decades, U.S. China policy has been driven by a combination of engagement and balancing. The Obama administration has put too much weight on the first, and diplomatic happy talk has done nothing to halt Beijing's military buildup. The next administration should get real about China and bolster the balancing half of Washington's strategic equation. The Other Russia Mikhail Dmitriev and Daniel Treisman 59 Moscow's anti-Putin protesters have captured the world's attention. But does their message resonate outside the big cities? New research shows that although Russians in the provinces have no taste for revolution, noisy street protests, or abstract slogans, they are deeply unhappy with the current political system and may soon demand change themselves. The Rise of Settler Terrorism Daniel Byman and Natan Sachs 73 Israeli authorities in the West Bank have long worried about stopping Palestinian terrorism. Now, they need to add a new item to the agenda: stopping radical Jewish settlers who have begun attacking innocent Palestinians and Israeli soldiers alike. Jerusalem has to the stop the violence, and Washington should help. Obamacare and the Court Barry Friedman 87 Pundits predicted that the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling on the Affordable Care Act would make history. In fact, by upholding the individual mandate as a tax, the justices took themselves largely out of the picture, ensuring that the debate over health care will play out in the political sphere, where it belongs. America the Undertaxed Andrea Louise Campbell 99 Compared with other developed countries, the United States has very low taxes, little income redistribution, and an extraordinarily complex tax code. If it wanted to, the government could raise taxes without crippling growth or productivity. Tax reform is ultimately a political choice, not an economic one—a statement about what sort of society Americans want. The Scottish Play Charles King 113 As a referendum on Scotland's independence looms, the question of the region's place in the United Kingdom has become the most pressing issue in British politics. Its experience shows how a smart secessionist party can dismantle a functioning country, and how central governments eager to buy off regions can end up making matters worse. Arms Away Jonathan Caverley and Ethan B. Kapstein For two decades, the United States has dominated the global arms trade, reaping a broad range of economic and geopolitical benefits in the process. But shortsighted decisions to produce expensive, cutting-edge weapons systems, rather than cheaper, more practical ones, are squandering this monopoly and letting other countries get into the market. Reviews & Responses

Latin Lessons Ray Suarez 134 Discussions of Hispanic Americans in the media and on the campaign trail are warped by ignorance about who they really are and what they really want. A new book seeks to fill the gap with a data-rich portrait of this complex community. Government, Geography, and Growth Jeffrey D. Sachs 142 According to Daron Acemoglu and James Robinson's Why Nations Fail, economic development hinges on a country's political institutions. But their monocausal analysis ignores other important factors (such as geography) that can also affect growth. Johnson the Power Broker H. W. Brands 151 In the latest installment of his epic biography of U.S. President Lyndon Johnson, Robert Caro reveals a man who obsessively sought power to assuage a misplaced sense of his own suffering-but also to help those whose struggles were less abstract. Iran and the Bomb Colin H. Kahl; Kenneth N. Waltz 157 A nuclear-armed Iran would not make the Middle East more secure, argues Colin Kahl; it would yield more terrorism and pose a risk of a nuclear exchange. Kenneth Waltz maintains that nuclear deterrence enhances stability, and if the price is more low-level conflict, so be it. Is Growth Good? Frances Beinecke; Dennis Meadows; Jørgen Randers; John Harte and Mary Ellen Harte; Bjørn Lomborg 163 The warnings of The Limits to Growth were far more prescient than Bjørn Lomborg suggests, argue several critics, including two of the book's authors. No they weren't, Lomborg insists. Stimulus or Reform? Menzie D. Chinn; Karl Smith; Raghuram G. Rajan 176 Since weak demand is at the heart of the recession, governments need to enact not just structural reforms but also stimulus programs, argues Menzie Chinn. Such reforms, moreover, don't always work out, writes Karl Smith. Raghuram Rajan demurs. Recent Books on International Relations 184 Including Walter Russell Mead on the decline of the American elite, Andrew Moravcsik on the fate of the euro, and John Waterbury on Bernard Lewis' legacy. The articles in Foreign Affairs do not represent any consensus of beliefs. We do not expect that readers will sympathize with all the sentiments they find here, for some of our writers will flatly disagree with others, but we hold that while keeping clear of mere vagaries, Foreign Affairs can do more to inform American public opinion by a broad hospitality to divergent ideas than it can by identifying itself with one school. We do not accept responsibility for the views expressed in any article, signed or unsigned, that appears in these pages. What we do accept is the responsibility for giving them a chance to appear.
