Off-campus Access of Digital resources

This actually is not news but renewal of an already existing library service “Off-campus access to digital resources”. Library has subscribed to various online digital resources having wide range of collections of books and journals related to various disciplines. At campus these resources are being utilized regularly by the UMT learning community and there is no login/password required. Your library has been providing Remote Access Service to the Digital databases aimed at further extending the knowledge services at your doorstep. The objective of this initiative is to increase the effectiveness of these resources and make the access to learning material much easier. The office of information technology has developed the University Digital Resources Remote Access System. The UMT learning community can access the resources of the digital library of the University through that system. The information regarding the installation and configuration has been linked with the tag “Off-campus access to digital resources” available on the library home page. <http://library.umat.edu.pk/> and referred to the digital resources remote access system http://www.umat.edu.pk/offices/oit/digital_Resources/.

Library also offers the hands on practice sessions to help learners to derive benefits from e-resources by familiarizing them with the use of remote access system.

The step-by-step guide for setting up remote access to digital resource is given below:

Library Digital Resources:

Download k-Meleon

Just click @ http://www.umat.edu.pk/offices/oit/digital_Resources/

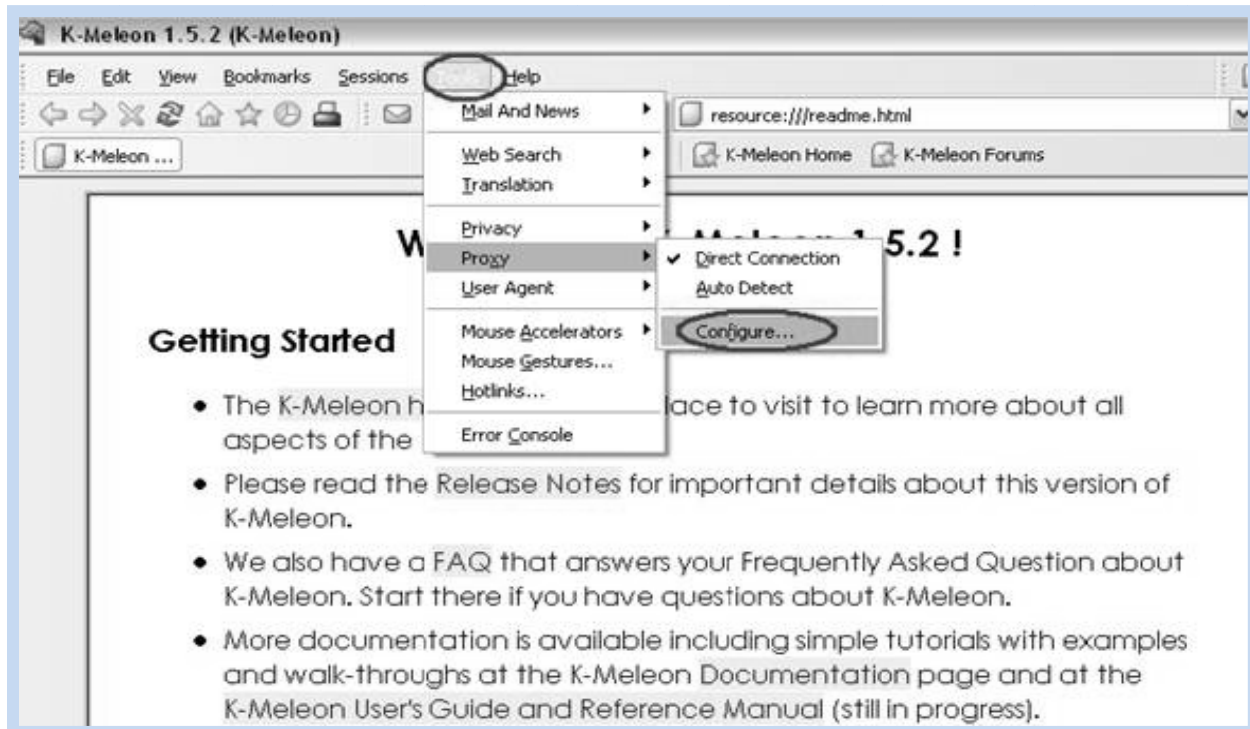

Installation and Configuration Steps of K-Meleon:

1. Click the Run Button
2. Click the Next Button
3. Click I Agree
4. Click the Next Button
5. Click the Install Button

After installation is complete press Next followed by click the Finish Button. Automatically a page will be displayed; there you have to do proxy settings.

Proxy Settings:

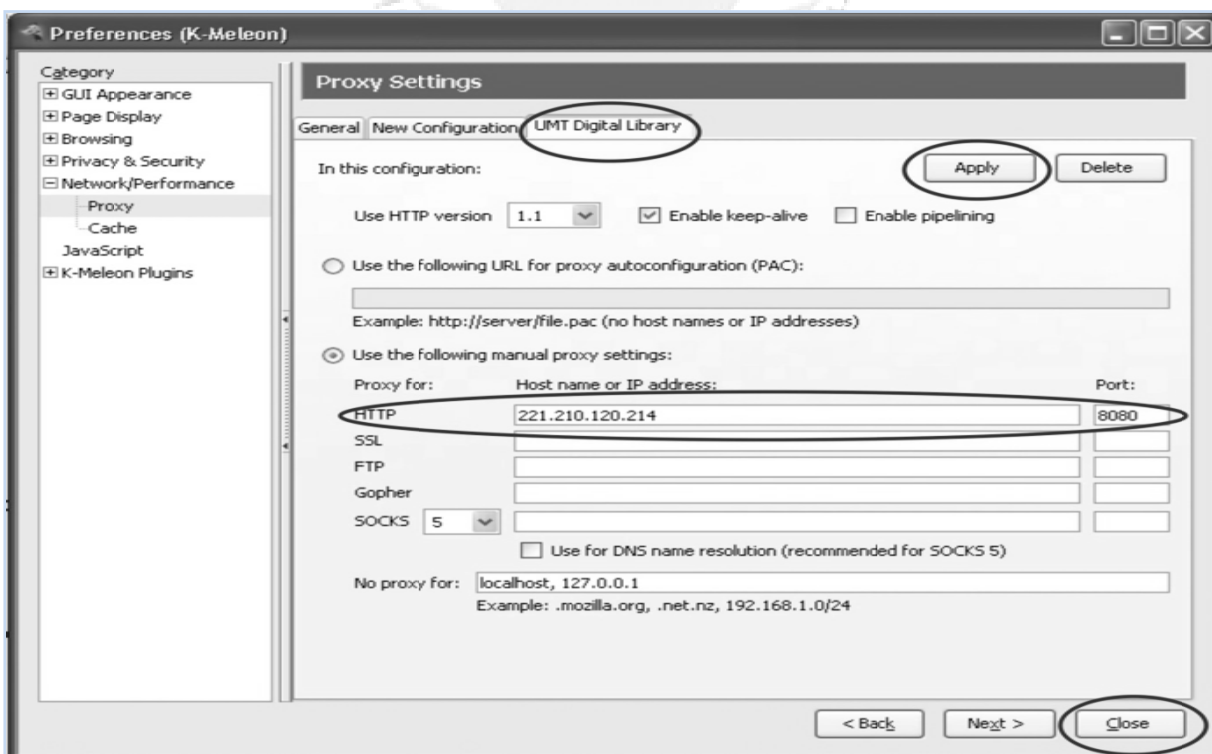

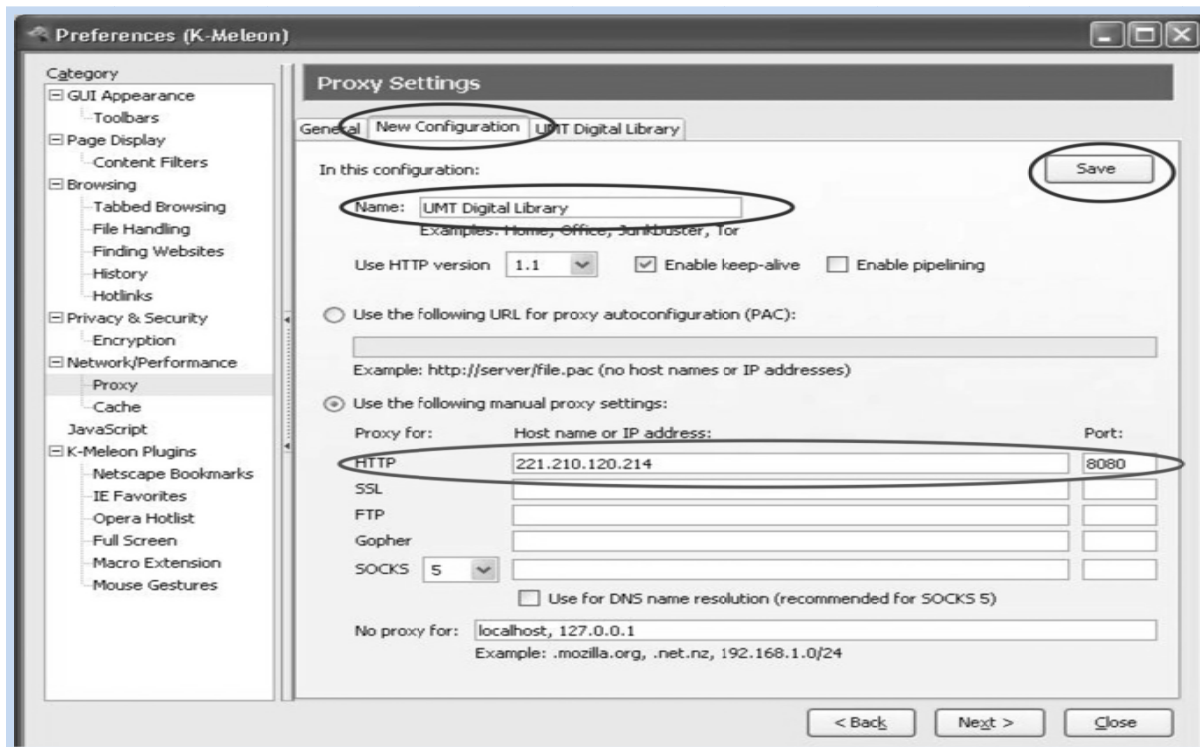

Step 1: Click Tools -> Proxy -> Configure

Step 2: Click New Configuration button

Step 3: New Configuration Dialogue Box In the New Configuration Dialogue Box Type UMT Digital Library in the Name tab and then Enter 221.120.210.214 IP address in HTTP tab with Port 8080 and then click on SAVE, Apply and Close this Dialogue Box.

For any query pertaining to any problem encountered in accessing these databases, you may contact library officials through speak-up lines: library@umt.edu.pk Ex: 329, 335 or visit Library.

Your library is embracing the changing landscape of the knowledge and information sector. Over the times the library has come a long way from an abstract idea to modern learning facilities.

In this age of openness and publicans Social media has now become an integral element of the future of library services, library blog, and Library face book page and now library tweeter page is an attempt to promote and extend library services in this direction. This move will definitely empower the learners to stay connected with library knowledge and learning services. The library twitter page is specifically designed to provide a platform for the free exchanging of ideas which could advocate the importance of dissemination of knowledge, sharing learning experiences. It will not only help them keep up with our reviews and services but would also help them to share their interests and goals. More the content are available virtually the more opportunities will be available for networking and consequently more help will also be available. We foster learners to join us on twitter: <https://twitter.com/#!/LRCservices>

Higher education in India by Dr. Ata-ur-Rehman

Saturday, May 05, 2012

Over the next five years India will establish 200 new universities and 40 new high-level institutes. Nine additional IITs will also be established, bringing the total number of IITs to 16. This was stated by Indian human resource development minister Kapil Sibal in the Lok Sabha recently. A sum of Rs800 billion, the biggest-ever allocation, is being set aside in the 12th five-year-plan of India (2012-2017) to propel it into a strong knowledge-based economy.

India has presently 17 percent of its youth between the ages of 17 of 23 enrolled in the higher education sector (as opposed to Pakistan's 7.6 percent). It plans to increase this enrolment to 30 percent of the same age group by the year 2030 (Chetan Chauhan, The Hindustan Times, April 25). India decided to replace its University Grants Commission with a stronger federally funded organisation, National Commission of Higher Education and Research. This was approved by the Indian Cabinet in December 2011. The recent steps taken by India are the result of a detailed presentation made to the Indian prime minister in July 2006 by Prof C N R Rao about the threat posed by the remarkable transformation underway in higher education in Pakistan. In an article entitled "Pak threat to Indian science," Neha Mehta wrote: "Pakistan may soon join China in giving India serious competition in science." (The Hindustan Times on July 23, 2006.) This presentation to the Indian prime minister set in motion a whole set of reforms in the higher education sector in India with a sharp increase in the salary structures of academics and a manifold increase in the budget for higher education. India had been giving the highest priority to higher education, science and technology for decades. The first prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, had already laid the foundations of modern India in the 1950s and 1960s. The prime minister of India himself headed what he considered to be the most important ministry in India – science and technology. The progress made by the higher education sector in Pakistan in the last decade is reflected from the increase in enrolment from 276,000 students in 2003 to 803,000 in 2011, increase in number of universities and degree-awarding institutes from 59 in the year 2000 to 137 by 2011, and an increase in international research publications from only 636 in 2000 to 6,200 in 2011. The PhD output too underwent an explosive growth. During the 55-year period from 1947 to 2002, only 3,281 PhDs had been granted by all our universities (a shocking average of about 3-4 PhDs per university per year)! During the subsequent eight-year period from 2003 to 2010, this number was exceeded and 3,658 PhDs were granted. There was maximum emphasis on quality, as all PhD theses were evaluated by at least two top experts in technologically advanced countries before approval.

The silent revolution that occurred in the higher education sector in Pakistan was lauded by neutral international experts and agencies and numerous reports published on it. In a book published by the Royal Society (London) entitled A New Golden Age the example of Pakistan was cited as the best model to be followed by other developing countries. Nature, the world's leading science journal, published four editorials and several articles on the transformation that was occurring in Pakistan and advised the new government in 2008 not to go back to the "stone age" that existed prior to the reforms introduced after 2002 in higher education.

The chairperson of the Senate Standing Committee on Education announced it as "Pakistan's golden period in higher education" and called for my reappointment after I had resigned in protest against the suspension of scholarships of HEC scholars sent abroad. I was conferred a high civil award by the Austrian government and the TWAS (Italy) Prize for institution building for leading these changes.

After the remarkable progress achieved in Pakistan in the higher education during 2003-2008, we have been systematically trying to destroy the one sector that had raised a gleam of hope among the masses. First, the development budget of the higher education sector was slashed by about 50 percent in 2009. Then, the scholarships of the several thousand Pakistani students studying in foreign universities were withheld, forcing them to go literally begging for funds on the streets of countries where they had gone to brighten their future.

This was followed by the status of the executive director of the HEC of a federal secretary being withdrawn, thereby preventing the HEC from holding Departmental Development Working Party (DDWP) meetings and approving projects for Pakistani universities. The projects to establish foreign engineering universities in major cities of Pakistan were closed down. This would have saved Rs50 billion annually and provided Pakistani students with the opportunity of getting quality education with foreign degrees without going abroad.

The HEC had found that 51 of our "honourable" parliamentarians had forged degrees and those of another 250 parliamentarians were suspect. In any other country such persons would have had to go to jail for cheating and forgery. However the Election Commission, instead of declaring their elections null and void, became a party to the game, in clear defiance of the orders of the Supreme Court of Pakistan. Why the Supreme Court has chosen to look the other way in this matter of enormous national importance is beyond understanding. A group of these "honourable" parliamentarians with forged degrees plotted to shred the HEC into pieces, and under their pressure a government notification was issued on 30th November 2010 shredding the HEC into pieces.

On my appeal to the Supreme Court of Pakistan this was overturned and the Supreme Court declared the move as unconstitutional. The greedy and evil designs continue. Another Bill moved in parliament recently is directed to take away the Rs44 billion budget of the HEC from the 17-member commission and give the funds to a secretary in the federal government to distribute. This will open the doors to corruption. At present the powers to allocate funds are vested with a 17-member commission that included four provincial secretaries, two federal secretaries, vice chancellors and eminent citizens.

So, while India progresses in leaps and bounds to strengthen its higher education, science and technology sectors, Pakistan sinks deeper into a quagmire created by incompetent and crooked parliamentarians. Following the spectacular successes of the HEC in Pakistan, India is in the process of closing down its UGC, to establish the National Commission of Higher Education and Research on the pattern of the HEC. Pakistan is however systematically destroying its HEC.

Clearly it is not India that is our enemy – we ourselves are!

SPOTLIGHT ON INNOVATION FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

66 Managing Your Innovation Portfolio For many companies, innovation is a sprawling collection of energetic but uncoordinated activities. Firms that excel strike a balance of core, adjacent, and transformational initiatives, applying the tools and skills appropriate to each and treating them as parts of a carefully integrated whole. Bansi Nagji and Geoff Tuff

76 The Trillion-Dollar R&D Fix A new method of calculating research productivity allows companies to estimate the effectiveness of their investment relative to the competition's, to determine their optimal R&D spend, and to see how changes in R&D expenditure affect the bottom line. Anne Marie Knott

Comments

- Baby Gap Steven Philip Kramer 2
Populations throughout the developed world are aging and shrinking, with dire consequences. Yet decline is not inevitable. Even in the industrialized world, governments can encourage childbearing through policies that let women reconcile work and family.
- The U.S. Army in a Time of Transition Raymond T. Odierno 7
With the Iraq war over and U.S. troops returning from Afghanistan, the U.S. Army faces a decade of change, writes its chief of staff. It will need to adjust to smaller budgets, focus more on Asia, and embrace a fuller range of potential missions.
- The Cartel Crackdown Robert C. Bonner 12
Mexico is winning its death match against the drug cartels and rebuilding once-corrupt institutions in the process. But an election is approaching, and the candidates are calling for a truce. Mexico can take its place in the sun, but only if it wipes out the cartels for good.

Essays

- Campaign Tips From Cicero
Quintus Tullius Cicero with commentary by James Carville 18
In 64 BC, the great Roman lawyer and orator Marcus Tullius Cicero ran for consul. His younger brother, Quintus, thought Marcus had a chance—as long as he ran a good campaign. So Quintus wrote a detailed strategy memo laying out just what Marcus needed to do to win. It's the best guide to electioneering you'll ever read, presented here with a commentary by the legendary political consultant James Carville.
- Scoring Obama's Foreign Policy
Martin S. Indyk, Kenneth G. Lieberthal, and Michael E. O'Hanlon 29
The Obama administration's foreign policy has tried to reconcile the president's lofty vision with his innate realism and political caution. And given the domestic and global situations Obama has faced, pragmatism has dominated. Judged by the standard of protecting U.S. interests, things have worked out quite well; judged by the standard of midwifing a new global order, they remain a work in progress.

Contents

- Botching the Bomb Jacques E. C. Hymans 44
 Nuclear weapons are hard to build for managerial reasons, not technical ones. This is why so few authoritarian regimes have succeeded: they don't have the right culture or institutions. When it comes to Iran's program, then, the United States and its allies should get out of the way and let Iran's worst enemies—its own leaders—gum up the process on their own.
- Europe After the Crisis Andrew Moravcsik 54
 As Europe emerges from economic crisis, a larger challenge remains: finally turning the eurozone into an optimal currency area, with economies similar enough to sustain a single monetary policy. Getting there will be difficult and expensive, but the future of European integration hangs in the balance.
- The True Lessons of the Recession Raghuram Rajan 69
 Most experts think the global recession was caused by a collapse in demand—and so, in good Keynesian fashion, they want governments to ramp up spending to compensate. But the West's recent growth was dependent on borrowing. Going even further into debt now won't help; instead, countries need to address the underlying flaws in their economies.
- Bearish on Brazil Ruchir Sharma 80
 Until recently, there seemed plenty of reasons to be bullish on Brazil. Having posted record growth for a decade and weathered the financial crisis well, the country looked poised to become a global economic leader. But the would-be giant stands on feet of clay. The economy depends too much on high commodity prices, and as demand falls, so may Brazil.
- Workers of the World Divide Bruce Western and Jake Rosenfeld 88
 Unions underwrote the affluence of U.S. workers in the last century. They ensured that manual work paid white-collar wages and gave laborers a voice in politics. But now, unions are declining, and the working and middle classes are paying the price. Reviving labor won't be easy—but doing so is critical to preserving America's economic and social health.
- Mafia States Moisés Naím 100
 Around the world, criminal organizations and governments are fusing to an unprecedented degree, blurring the distinction between national interests and what suits the gangsters. Mafia states enjoy the unhealthy advantages of their hybrid status: they're as nimble as gangs and as well protected as governments, and thus more dangerous than either.
- The Climate Threat We Can Beat David G. Victor, Charles F. Kennel, and Veerabhadran Ramanathan 112
 For too long, climate diplomacy has focused on carbon dioxide. But at least 40 percent of global warming can be blamed on shorter-lived pollutants, which also cause disease and damage crops in developing states. Reining in pollution would thus accomplish two goals, while finally getting countries such as China and India into the climate-change business.
- Tough Love for Renewable Energy Jeffrey Ball 122
 Proponents of renewable energy have had a hard time lately, thanks to the recession, competition from natural gas, and embarrassments such as Solyndra. But it's too early to give up, since recent advances have made wind and solar power more competitive than ever. Still, governments must redesign their policies and help renewables slash costs.

Developing Symptoms Thomas J. Bollyky 134

The main health threat in developing states today is not plagues or parasites but illnesses such as cancer and diabetes, noncommunicable diseases long associated with the rich world. NCDs are striking poorer, younger populations, and this could debilitate states and the global economy. The best way for the West to help is by pushing for governance reform.

Reviews & Responses

The First Global Man Jeremy Adelman 146

A pair of books by Charles Mann describe life in the Americas before and after Columbus linked the hemispheres and kicked off the first era of globalization. It turns out that the New World was far more technologically advanced than subsequent generations have realized, with plenty to teach the Old—especially about how to simultaneously exploit and preserve key natural resources.

America's Hidden Government Desmond King 153

Suzanne Mettler's The Submerged State shows that executing policy through tax breaks and other indirect measures encourages Americans to think that they do not rely on the government for help, even when they do. The result is a distorted public discourse and an erosion of democratic legitimacy.

India's Broken Promise Basharat Peer 158

Indian elites are cheering their country's newfound status and influence. But two recent books reveal the ugly underbelly of India's success story. A vast gulf has opened up between the rich and the poor, corruption suffuses every aspect of life, and the country's political leaders lack the vision needed to turn this would-be world power into an actual one.

Tough Talk Is Cheap Alexander Evans; Stephen D. Krasner 166

The United States has tried cracking down on Pakistan before. It did not work then, and it will not work now, writes Alexander Evans. The difference, counters Stephen Krasner, is that this time the United States has real leverage.

Recent Books on International Relations 171

Including Richard Cooper on how China must change, Lawrence Freedman on hunting al Qaeda, Robert Legvold on Putin's skills and Russia's ills, and Nicolas van de Walle on AIDS and the legacies of colonialism in Africa.

The articles in Foreign Affairs do not represent any consensus of beliefs. We do not expect that readers will sympathize with all the sentiments they find here, for some of our writers will flatly disagree with others, but we hold that while keeping clear of mere vagaries, Foreign Affairs can do more to inform American public opinion by a broad hospitality to divergent ideas than it can by identifying itself with one school. We do not accept responsibility for the views expressed in any article, signed or unsigned, that appears in these pages. What we do accept is the responsibility for giving them a chance to appear.

The Languages of the Arab Revolutions

Abdou Filali-Ansary

The upheavals that have been shaking the Arab-Muslim world are revolutions in discourse as well as in the streets. Arabs are using not only traditional and religious vocabularies, but also a new set of expressions that are modern and represent popular aspirations.

Southeast Asia

I. Strong-State Democratization in Malaysia and Singapore

Dan Slater

The strong state in Malaysia and Singapore best explains why their authoritarian regimes have proved so stable and enduring. That is also the reason why democratization would go smoothly in both countries—yet, paradoxically, might never happen there at all.

II. Elites vs. Reform in Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam

Martin Gainsborough

34

Vietnam and its smaller neighbors Laos and Cambodia remain bastions of illiberalism and one-party rule despite rapid economic growth and falling poverty. What will it take to reform their elitist political cultures and curtail the use of public office for private ends?

III. Thailand's Uneasy Passage

Thitinan Pongsudhirak

47

In 2011, Thais reelected a party backed by deposed prime minister Thaksin Shinawatra. Why is his brand of populism so irrepressible, and what can be done to reconcile the voting power of Thailand's rural lower classes with the establishment dug in around the Thai monarchy?

IV. Minding the Gap Between Democracy and Governance

Donald K. Emmerson

62

Do democracy and good governance necessarily go hand-in-hand? In most Southeast Asian countries, a gap exists between the two. How should we understand good governance in an authoritarian context? And what does poor governance mean for the legitimacy of democracy?

The Freedom House Survey for 2011

The Year of the Arab Uprisings

Arch Puddington

74

Although in 2011 declines in freedom exceeded gains for the sixth straight year, the uprisings in the Arab world represent the most significant challenge to authoritarian rule since the collapse of Soviet communism.

12 MAY 2012

Tunisia's Transition and the Twin Tolerations Alfred Stepan	89
Of all the "Arab Spring" countries, so far only Tunisia has managed to make a transition to democracy. Tunisians now have a chance to show the world a new example of how religion, society, and the state can relate to one another under democratic conditions.
Personalism and Populism in Nicaragua Forrest D. Colburn and Arturo Cruz S.	104
For much of its history, Nicaragua has shown a predilection for personalist and populist rule. What explains the persistence and allure of these phenomena, and what obstacles do they pose for democracy in Nicaragua?
Ballots, Bullets, and the Bottom Billion Arthur A. Goldsmith	119
Does recourse to the ballot box spur violence and instability in the world's poorest countries? Despite the worries of modernization theorists such as Paul Collier, the evidence indicates that, over time, elections are not associated with higher levels of political violence.
How Poland Promotes Democracy Tsveta Petrova	133
Among a new generation of international democracy promoters—often former recipients of democracy assistance themselves—Poland stands out. Its efforts, though mostly in its own neighborhood, show the importance of combining direct assistance with quiet diplomacy.
Argentina: The Persistence of Peronism Ernesto Calvo and M. Victoria Murillo	148
Despite a rocky first term, Peronist President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner saw her popularity rebound, leading to a huge reelection victory in 2011. Why is Peronism still the dominant "brand" in Argentine politics, and how has she come to own it so thoroughly?
