

Re-visioning the Large Class

This talk will provide insights into the verbal and nonverbal behaviours of professors who excel in the large class, as well as their use of technology, in building teacher immediacy. Given the place of large classes in today's universities, understanding how they can be best delivered is critically important for the student experience, for learning and, ultimately, for the future of universities themselves. The development of positive relationships between instructor and students through the professor's verbal and nonverbal communication, or teacher immediacy, plays a major role in the development of a successful learning environment.
