Course description

This introductory course is designed from the perspective of public administration. It focuses on nation-states who create political structure, for reducing conflict and increasing cooperation necessary to organize citizens for collective action. Politics is unavoidable in a society because every individual has own goals which need resources to achieve those goals. Resources for goal achievement can be cause of conflict. Likewise, nation-states have national interest which may cause conflict within the nation and with other nations. It, therefore is necessary to understand how politics is organized and experienced around the world, what are views on good or bad politics and why would people act politically? This course will take you through the basic concepts in political science, like nation-state, type of governments, different political ideologies, democracies, globalization and nation-states, constitution, etc.

Course Objectives

The objectives of the course are to:

1. Understand concepts, theories and political ideologies
2. Critically evaluate the political ideologies that states follow
3. Evaluate the representativeness of government and use of power
4. Comprehend the concepts of constitution, democracies, welfare etc.

Assessment: Attendance, discussion (10%), test (10%), Assignment and presentation (15%), mid-term (20%) and final exam (45%)

Assessment Criteria

The assignment should demonstrate that students have understood the issue they are addressing, made themselves familiar with the appropriate literature, and demonstrated the ability both to assess the arguments on all sides of the debate, and to formulate a rationale for their own position.

In marking students' written work, the follow will be taken into consideration:

- a) the quality of content: the breadth and depth of analysis, the quality of critical comment;
- b) the structure: logical development and coherence of the argument;
- c) the range of literature used in making the argument;
