Message from Director TKS

With the advent of the new academic year, it is imperative that our education moves with the development of new curricula and teaching methodologies reflective of a constantly changing global environment. While the worst of COVID-19 may be in the past, its incessant resurgence in waves is a new normal that we must come to terms with. As always, when faced with an existential threat, we adapted. The paradigm shift towards the use of digital technologies in education is something that has been embraced by worldwide and our country is approaching a state where we will see these technologies more often in the classroom and experience their usage with greater frequency.

To reach this state, one of the first steps has been the adoption of the Single National Curriculum (SNC) nationwide. I am very proud to observe that The Knowledge School campuses have been at the forefront of the movement to adopt the SNC as a standard, thanks to the energetic efforts of our partners in our mission: our Network Associates, principals, faculty and staff. Our staff at the TKS Head Office has, of course, been working in tandem with our campuses to this end through rigorous and extensive training sessions and making sure of the availability of SNC-aligned curriculum for them. Their achievements in this regard are laudable: the thorough training of our entire 150-campus strong network of TKS schools in the space of a month and being amongst the first institutions to publish SNC-aligned books are no small feats.

Thus, I would like to end with a message of unity and purpose: working together for the same goal, we continue to be capable of great deeds and remarkable accomplishments in the world of education. Striving together regardless of trials and tribulations is a necessary requirement for us all to realize the ultimate goal of the betterment of the people of this country.
